Religion and violence: Inseparable?

Meghan Kane
Weekly Staff Writer

Is violence an inescapable result of religious commitment, or is it a distortion, a human projection on a God in whom there is no violence? Is it the sole province of extremists, or do the roots of conflict touch all persons of faith? These questions and more will be discussed at the Trinity Institute’s 38th National Theological Conference, Religion and Violence: Untangling the Roots of Conflict sponsored by the Gustavus Office of Church Relations January 21-23.

Gustavus will act as a regional partner site for the conference that will bring in prominent Christian, Muslim and Jewish theologians to discuss the relationship between religion and violence throughout history. Keynote addresses will be given by James H. Cone, Black Liberation theologian; Susannah Heschel, Jewish scholar; James Carroll, Roman Catholic author; and Tariq Ramadan, Islamic scholar. Bishop of the Episcopal Church Katharine Jefferts will present the opening sermon during the Evensong, beginning the conference.

For nearly four decades, the Trinity Institute has held national conferences on topics of interest in their continuing education program for clergy and laity. The conferences are held at Trinity Wall Street, a large Episcopal church in New York City. Since 2006, the Trinity Institute has extended invitations to churches, seminars, colleges and universities to be partner sites, participating in video webcasts. The Office of Church Relations here at Gustavus successfully sponsored the event in 2006 and Administrative Assistant Marilyn Beyer said, “We are excited about the interdenominational aspect of this conference and the conversations that are sure to be generated.”

A lonely January

Steven Palmer
Weekly Staff Writer

G ases on campus for January Interim Experience have probably noticed that the campus is less vibrant than normal, due to fewer students and the chilly weather. Some of this is also because of the decision to require only two January Interim Experiences for graduation.

Academic Dean and Professor Eric Elason, who is currently on campus teaching an interim course on C.S. Lewis, said that “this senior class was the last class at Gustavus required to take three January Interim Experiences.”

January Interim Experience was introduced in the sixties. Gustavus was one of the first schools to introduce it. It was partly in response to the rigid course requirements in regular semesters. There was a very limited selection. So January Interim Experience was a way to break away from that,” said Elason.

Elason said that the administration is aware of the empty appearance of campus. “It’s not our main concern, but the public relations aspect comes into consideration. Tour groups coming to campus [during January Interim Experience] might get the impression that this is a sleepy place.”
4 BR (2-bath), 2 BR or 1 BR
Rent next year: one block from campus! All utilities included in the rent except lights, spacious 4 BR ($1320), 2 BR ($690) and 1 BR ($575) apartments. Appliances, heat, water & sewer included. Off street parking, on-site laundry facilities, deck with a beautiful view of the valley. 1118 South Washington Avenue
Call: 507-382-0249

Break Free! Live in your own house!
12 month lease for next year.
Legendary “Green Acres” 6 BR, 2BA, 2 Kitchens, LOTZ of living space. Up to 8 people.
“Taj Mahal” of St. Peter, 4 BR, 2BA, 2 Kitchens, Close to GAC campus, BIG yard for grilling.
“Gingerbread House”, 3 BR, 1 BA, w/loft. Big yard! Across from park for healthy exercise.
“Club 169” Make it your address! 4 BR, Eat-in Kitchen, Xtra Room for study or entertaining, 1 1/2 car garage.
Call Joyce for a personal showing (612) 306-0744.

Looking for a fun and energetic person to coach a boys’ gymnastics team next year.
If interested please contact Melissa Lee at mlee@gac.edu

Tip of the week:
Our Tip of the Week, regarding laptop security, is courtesy of John Livingston of Absolute Software.
“Anyone who owns a laptop today needs to be concerned with its security...Common sense practices include: using visual deterrents, keeping laptops out of sight when traveling and securing the laptop when it’s not in use. Using complex passwords, changing them regularly and backing up data on a scheduled basis is also important. Software safeguards include anti-virus, anti-spyware, encryption and firewall programs. Laptop theft recovery tools also are highly effective. These solutions can locate a stolen laptop and recover the computer as well as catch the thieves.”
Sheep also appear in “Mother and Child” and “Alpha Male.” These drawings depict the sheep as the focal point, but their size is unexpected. They only occupy the bottom quarter of the picture; the rest is comprised of the black background, making the drawing very dramatic.

In Lowe’s drawings of trees, the difference in strokes adds wonderful texture and depth. The detail in the trees’ bark and leaves contrasts beautifully with the more muted background. These drawings are of “discreet natural spaces found inside urban settings,” said Lowe. “In them, I’m also interested in the dramatic sensory shift that occurs in a moment of time at the threshold from one mental and physical place into another.”

Lowe’s drawings will be on display until February 24, 2008. They are available for viewing during the Arts Center’s hours: Tuesdays through Sundays, 1:00 p.m. to 5:00 p.m. and Thursdays, 1:00 p.m. to 8:00 p.m. The Arts Center is located at 315 South Minnesota Avenue.

Two years ago, there was a move within the faculty and administration to remove January Interim Experience entirely. “As you might know, faculty never agree on anything,” Elia- son said. “But for about a semester we seriously considered the cancellation of January Interim Experience. We have an ear to the ground attitude about these things, and we asked the students. Overwhelmingly, they said they wanted to keep it.”

Students cited three main reasons, according to Elia- son: study abroad opportunities, off-campus internships and, as many students put it, “not having to work as hard.”

The Gustavus administration approved of the first two, but remained concerned about the third. However, some enjoy the supposed ease of January. Sophomore Lucas Neher said, “January Interim Experience brings the campus together. There is a relaxed feeling—it is where people really get to know each other.”

Overall, the school’s January Interim policies leave most of the first-year class and a smattering of upper-class students left on campus. Does this affect the campus atmosphere? Sophomore Abbey Feenstra said, “There is a definite sense of idleness on campus.” Her roommate Katy Fuller agreed. She noted that “students seem disengaged and the campus seems dormant.”

Jonathan Kidd, a sophomore senator and peer assistant, said that on-campus groups recognize this and notes that there are activities available on campus to counter the wintry weather and quiet campus. “January Interim Experience is one of the best opportunities to explore something new and have some fun with your fellow Gusties.” He cited many activities, such as weekly tap dancing lessons in the Dive.

Overall, it is clear that the intent and reasons for January Interim Experience at Gustavus have changed over time, so it is likely to change in the future. For the time being, however, there may remain a divide between students on campus, who feel alternately “laid back” or “stuck on the hill,” and the Gustavus administration and faculty, who remain internally divided but ultimately hope students will use the time for something constructive.

Religion and violence have a deeply rooted his- tory, but the fact of the mat- ter is, many claim, that this violence is contradictory to the teachings of Christianity, Islam, and Judaism. So why are the histories of religion and violence seemingly inexorable? Is religion worth killing for? The conference hopes to address these is- sues, and break down the boundaries that separate the various groups.

Students are encouraged to attend the conference. The $10 registration fee will be waived for Gustavus students and members of the Gustavus community. More information about the conference in general can be found on the Trinity In- stitute’s website. For more information about Gustavus as a regional partner site and the conference schedule, contact Marilyn Beyer in the Office of Church Relations.
By the time Gustavus seniors reach their spring semesters, they tend to notice a lot more rocks on campus; and I’m not talking about the ones you might find in the arboretum. As we continue to get older, it almost becomes more of the exception than the rule to be unmarried. In the movie The Heartbreak Kid, a Farrelly Brothers film, we see a 40-something small business owner, Ed-die Kantrow, played by Ben Stiller, who has never been married. He starts to feel the pressure to be, however, from both his father Doc (Jerry Stiller, who is his father in real life) and his peers after his best friend ties the knot. By way of a random encounter outside his store, Eddie meets the young and beautiful Lila (Malin Akerman). They start dating, but after a few weeks Lila finds out she must move out of the country for her job unless she gets married. Eddie quickly realizes that the pressure is on to be married and that the plot is clearly an attempt to relive the success of the 1998 Farrelly Brothers film, There’s Something About Mary. Ben Stiller once again shows us his willingness to be subject to some awkward emotional and physical situations, most of which are worthy of some good chuckles, but the plot is clearly an attempt to relive the success of the 1998 film. The newlyweds travel down the California coast to a Cabo San Lucas resort, managed by the funny yet creepy Uncle Tito (comedian Carlos Mencia) for their honeymoon. However, Eddie quickly realizes that the more he finds out about Lila, the less he likes. After sunburn sidelines Lila for a few days, Eddie meets the down-to-earth Miranda (Michelle Monaghan) who is staying at the same resort with her family. The two end up falling for each other, but the only thing is—she has no idea that Eddie is on his honeymoon. Miranda comes from a very large, stereotypical southern family, and Eddie fights for her family’s approval to the end, especially after a big “secret” is revealed. Eddie finds himself in the predicament of trying to get out his new marriage to pursue the true woman of his dreams.

If all you’re looking for are some good laughs and possibly some crude humor, you will definitely find it with The Heartbreak Kid. But if you’re looking for a unique plotline and a new comedy you might as well stay in and watch There’s Something About Mary. Otherwise, you might be a little “heartbroken.” The Heartbreak Kid will be showing January 18 and 19, at 7:00 and 10:00 p.m. in Wallenberg Auditorium.
Welcome to Wayne’s World

Gustavus’ equipment manager, Wayne Norman, is much more than the man in the blue window, furnishing every Gustie athlete with apparel and equipment.

Wayne has been manning his post as Gustavus’ equipment manager for the past ten years. In the process, he has become one of the most popular and recognizable members of the campus community.

Wayne Norman’s office is not a typical office. Upon entering, a laundered starch scent is undeniable. There are women’s basketball jerseys lining the front table ready to be handed out for the upcoming game. Towards the back, gold jerseys are on hangers. Wayne’s office has a desk, radio, computer and a few filing cabinets. These are things characteristic of a common office, but his large work area also serves as a laundry and athletic storage room. Welcome to Wayne’s World.

Wayne’s smiling face is a staple in Lund Center, where he serves as the Gustavus Athletics’ equipment manager. He is found almost every day of the week sitting in his makeshift office, tending to the equipment and uniform needs of many of Gustavus’ athletes.

Wayne is entering his tenth year as athletic equipment manager at Gustavus. He took over the department in 1998 after longtime equipment department employee Willie Lindquist retired. Wayne’s origins in equipment management began when he entered North Dakota State University as a student and became the student manager for the NDSU Bison Football Team.

Graduating from NDSU with a degree in physical education, Wayne went on to graduate school at Colorado State. He worked as a fitness instructor and retail manager at Champs Sports before returning to NDSU to become the assistant equipment manager of the Bison athletic program in 1990.

Wayne said one of his fondest career memories happened in his first year at NDSU as equipment manager when he helped the Bison win the Division II National Championship. The title game site had some problems with the coaches’ headsets, and Wayne contributed by getting NDSU’s own headsets working. Wayne said, “I got our side’s headsets set up for the second half and we won on to win the game.” Wayne has enjoyed much of his time at Gustavus as well. He has grown quite close to the other employees, especially the football coaching staff. His favorite thing about working here is the great community of people surrounding him. “It’s always fun to be around college kids and athletes. I just enjoy sports. [The job] keeps me involved in [them]...and it’s a fun time,” Wayne said.

It is clear his interaction with students has an effect on Wayne. He shares many things in common with students, starting with his interest in music. He likes all kinds of music ranging from country to rap, and he revealed that his secret talent is singing. Wayne also likes to play PlayStation at his home in St. Peter. When he is not attending Gustavus sporting events, he likes to watch football and basketball on television as well. Three days a week he also gets a workout with other faculty members in a pick-up basketball game during his lunch hour.

With all the time he spends around athletics, it is not surprising that Wayne’s passion is a sport: golf. When school is out of session for the summer months he gets lots of rounds in. Most summers he is often found often at the Le Sueur country club, where he is an avid member.

Though Wayne calls himself a quiet, laid-back guy, his personality doesn’t prevent him from being a recognizable figure among Gustavus’ student-athletes. He works really hard to keep things going smoothly during sporting events, whether it be fixing a score clock or maintaining the athletic facilities.

Senior volleyball player, Jennifer Thelemann said, “Wayne works hard to make us look good, and we can always count on him to fix things. One time we had a leaky roof over the gym during practice, and there is Wayne with towels, working to soak up the puddles off the floor.”

Weekdays from about 2:30 to 5:00 p.m., Wayne is usually on the other side of his window. During this time, he hands out towels and equipment prior to practice. He is also the guy that takes care of the laundry after sweaty Gustie athletes are the most demanding. Though laundry is the most common and ongoing task for Wayne, he also does a lot work behind the scenes. Every year he must come up with an equipment budget to satisfy the entire athletic program. He works with coaches to buy new jerseys and uniforms for the various Gustie sports. “Baseball jerseys need to be replaced more often than a sport like hockey. We get the baseball uniforms about every two years because of the wear and tear,” Wayne said.

When uniforms are eventually replaced, Wayne sells the old ones at the annual athletic equipment sale, better known to students as “The Wayne Sale.” Wayne coordinates the event to coincide with the spring Reading Day and the sale has become very popular among student athletic supporters. Gustavus apparel is sold at a very low price. This makes the day very competitive to get in early and get the best Gustie gear. “Now I’ve got people lining up at eight in the morning before its open at noon and I think its kinda crazy,” said Wayne.

The work for Wayne never runs out, and he keeps himself busy through each athletic season. He says he loves his job here at Gustavus, but he doesn’t know if he will be around for 35 years like his predecessor Willie Lindquist was. “Sometimes I think I’d like to go up to Division I and work with just football teams, but there’s a lot of headaches in Division I, too,” Wayne said.

For now, Wayne is happy with his ten years at Gustavus. He has watched the construction of a new football field, seen many Gustavus athletes have success at the national level and is looking forward getting more storage space with an addition to the Lund Center planned for the future.
Gusties are red hot on the hardwood

Andy Keenan
Weekly Sports Editor

Gustavus' Men's Basketball squad has been playing exceptionally good ball over the past two months and their success is evident in their record. As it stands now, the Gusties sit pretty with a 10-3 record overall and a 6-2 conference mark. That includes a seven game winning streak that ended last week in a 12 point loss in Moorhead to Concordia. Gustavus has won nine out of their last ten games, including a pair of wins in Boston over the Holiday Break against Springfield and UM-Boston and an impressive come-from-behind win over a chubby and physical St. Thomas team last Saturday in St. Peter.

Against St. Thomas, the boys from atop the hill found themselves in a 15 point hole early in the second half, but after an 18-0 run stretching over seven minute time span, Gustavus had climbed back into the game. After a missing the front-end of a one and one by St. Thomas’ Teddy Archer with eleven seconds left, Senior Ty Kaus drove the length of the floor and lifted a floating, underhand layup into the cylinder to give the Gusties a one-point lead that they wouldn’t relinquish.

Kaus undoubtedly played the hero role for Gustavus against the formerly #23-ranked Tommies, scoring 14 points on six of seven from the floor and a perfect 2-2 from behind the arc in the second half, in addition to the game winner.

Senior wing Trevor Wittwer was the team’s leading scorer in that game with 24 points, three rebounds and a_beauty four blocked shots. Wittwer’s heroics in the St. Thomas game, as well as their two previous games—a win at home over St. Mary’s and a rare road loss to Concordia, earned him the MIAC Men’s Basketball Athlete of the Week honor. The Knights sit with the third best record in the conference, behind St. Thomas and the Gusties. Having lost a 61-60 thriller to Cereal Bowl rival St. Olaf on the January 16, Gustavus will be sure have a handful of First-year reserve point guard Danny Schmidtknecht scored nine and distributed three in the 85-79 victory.

This past Wednesday brought more success for the Gusties. The team traveled to Hamline and pulled out of St. Paul with an impressive 74-61 victory over the Cobbers. Wittwer and Kaus both came through big again for the Gusties, scoring 21 points and swiping ten boards a piece. Van Sickle added 12 despite shooting 2-10 from three point land.

“I would say that we have very good team chemistry and that’s been our key to success this season,” said Van Sickle on Wednesday. “We are all unselfish and we are more concerned with winning. We’re a close team, and therefore, we’re a better team because of that.”

Gustavus has a pair of upcoming contests where the team has the opportunity to prove themselves further. They play host to rival St. Olaf on Saturday, January 19, a team that has one but one conference game this season but will be looking to knock off the high-flying Gusties.

The following Monday brings a crucial showdown with Carleton in Northfield. The Knights sit with the third best record in the conference, behind St. Thomas and the Gusties. Having lost a 61-60 thriller to Cereal Bowl rival St. Olaf on the January 16, Gustavus will be sure have a handful of...
Your nagging conscience

A true campaign slogan

Alya Aziz-Zaman
Weekly Staff Columnist

B r a c k Obama’s official campaign slogan, “Change We Can Believe In,” is a slogan I can believe in. While campaign slogans are carefully conceived public relations tactics designed to strike some emotional chord within voters, and are probably not much more so than celebrity endorsements, this slogan is unique because it actually does reflect what this candidate believes in and what he will accomplish if elected. Barack Obama’s campaign slogan is refreshing because it is honest. It’s an accurate reflection of the driving philosophy behind Obama’s politics, a philosophy that is usually hard to discern in presidential candidates as they keep adjusting their ideas to reflect the changing political climate. All along, Obama has remained true to his mantra of initiating change in Washington.

Almost everyone has heard the criticisms of Obama: that he is inexperienced, that he talks about big ideas without mentioning specifics, that he is an idealist. But oddly enough, “Change We Can Believe In” seems to respond to each of these criticisms by turning them into positives.

Of the critics who say Obama is inexperienced, his slogan seems to say, “This candidate’s real experience lies outside of the political sphere. It lies in his time living abroad and learning to see the world from an entirely different perspective, in his time as a community organizer where he dealt hands-on with urban poverty, in his time defending civil rights in the courtroom and in his time teaching constitutional law in the classroom.”

The word “change” challenges us to examine his past, his principles, even his voting record, and then compare them to the current state of politics. The slogan doesn’t promise a perfect past, completely unchanged principles or an unblemished voting record. It promises a long-standing commitment to moving politics in a new direction. It’s the kind of common thread underlying all of his proposed policies, a thread that so many other candidates lack. In this context, this slogan can be dissected to mean, “Change we can believe in because of the concrete life experiences that we have given this candidate a perspective currently lacking in Washington.”

“Change We Can Believe In” would scoff, if that were possible, at the style of politics that Obama doesn’t discuss specifics. Instead, the slogan stoically reminds us that this is change we can believe in. “Can” is the key word here. Could we believe in this particular brand of change if we were ignorant of the nitty-gritty details that make change possible? Of course not. The slogan reminds us that the evidence is there, that nothing is glossed over for the sake of inspiring false hope. A few minutes on barackobama.com reveal his plans, in far more detail than any of his competitors, for comprehensive healthcare, a stronger economy, an end to the war in Iraq and sixteen other issues he believes to be important. I won’t mention those specifics here, because I trust voters to do their own research, but suffice it to say that I can believe in these ideas because they are nitty-gritty and specific. Obama simply chooses not to lose sight of the big picture, but in doing so, he draws the criticism of being too broad.

Finally, when critics call Barack Obama an idealist, his slogan seems to say, “Damn straight.”

Liberals in conservative clothing

Andrew Evenson
Weekly Staff Columnist

I’m sure all of you have noticed that you can’t turn on the television these days without hearing about the presidential primaries. (It has even become difficult to get updates on Britney Spears’ quest to become the world’s worst mother.) Iowa, New Hampshire and South Carolina would have you believe they are the only states in America that a president should be concerned about. Two of the winners on the Republican side have been Governor Mike Huckabee in Iowa and Senator John McCain in New Hampshire. Both of these men seemed to be all but dead a couple months ago, but they have suddenly resurrected their campaigns into the national spotlight. This focus, however, has led many conservatives to discover how these two men have a history of betraying the conservative positions that give the party such a strong base of support.

Each Republican candidate brings new ideas and perspectives to the party, but there are certain positions which most conservatives consider to be non-negotiable. The federal government must be kept as small as possible by reducing taxes, cutting spending and allowing the free market to encourage economic growth as it has throughout our country’s history. The main responsibility of the federal government is to protect us by ensuring that we have the world’s best military. Life and its virtues should be respected from conception until death, and anyone who violates these rights should be punished appropriately for the crimes they commit. These values unite us as a party, and John McCain and Mike Huckabee threaten to divide our party by betraying these values on several accounts.

Mike Huckabee came onto the political scene as a former Baptist minister from Arkansas who had the charisma of a preacher and plays a mean bass guitar, but his rhetoric and conservative social positions can no longer hide the fact that he has little respect for capitalism and has no problem raising taxes and pardoning criminals. I dare to even say that he has pulled the wool over supporter Chuck Norris’ eyes. (I guess fictional Texas Rangers are blind to liberal rhetoric.)

Huckabee repeatedly raised taxes in Arkansas and has supported big federal government programs like the No-Child-Left-Behind Act and wants to expand the government’s role in health care. He increased the tax burden in Arkansas by 47 percent and along with all his numerous tax hikes, he has supported national ban on smoking. The good side of this is that it would irritate chain cigarette-smoking liberals like Barack Obama, but Republicans stand for giving people the right to make their own choices as long as it is not directly hurting others. Tax-Hike Mike has also repeatedly bashed free trade and supported excessive farm subsidies. Don’t let Huckabee and Chuck Norris roundhouse kick you into believing that he is a fiscal conservative.

I just don’t understand why people still have any tolerance for John McCain. He is a bitter old man who consistent-ly bashes his own party and then tries to make them rally around him when he runs for president. It seems like every bill he writes is co-sponsored by a liberal Democrat and is in direct opposition to conservative principles.

Continued on page 8
McCain and Huckabee, two candidates for the Republican nomination, chatting before a GOP debate.

McCain-Feingold was a campaign finance bill that has resulted in greater numbers of negative “independent” campaign commercials like the Swift Boat commercials of 2004 and it makes it more difficult for radio talk-show hosts like Rush Limbaugh to openly express their opinions.

McCain-Kennedy was an immigration bill that essentially let all illegal immigrants enter and stay in the country without penalty. Even convicted felons would be able to remain within our borders. This is simply unfair to those who are trying to get into our country legally. If you were a 10-year-old girl waiting in line for a “Hannah Montana” concert for eight hours, how would you like it if they suddenly let a convicted child molester, who just showed up, to enter in front of you for free? These two bills are just a couple examples, but they show the Washington back-scratching that John McCain does in order to gain power. These are not the actions of a maverick who is going to change government for the better.

McCain also voted against President Bush’s tax cuts in 2003 and has used the military by taking all the credit for the success of the troop surge in Iraq. Many conservatives have been manipulated into believing that only John McCain can beat a Democrat in the election, but if he is going to act the same way as Hillary Clinton, what difference does it make? Republicans can win in November if they stick to the principles that have gotten them elected in the past.

Mike Huckabee and John McCain are not the right choice for America and definitely not the right choice for the Republican Party. I believe that there are good conservative alternatives in Mitt Romney and Fred Thompson. These two men have the experience and skills to defeat the Democratic candidate, but even if they don’t win, it is more important to stick to conservative values than to sell-out in order to guarantee a Republican victory. I encourage my conservative friends to make sure they know what they are voting for when they support and nominate a Republican presidential candidate.

Letter to the Editor
The misrepresentation of racism

I write this letter in response to a letter to the editor, included in the December 7 issue of The Gustavian Weekly, on Gustavus’ “whitemail race relations.” I personally found this letter to be valid; however, I greatly disagree with much of the article. The letter by Shana Clarke claimed that Gustavus left minority students in a “racially insensitive and culturally ignorant environment absent of peer support.” The letter also said that white students feel they are a “privileged majority.”

I find this wrong on one account. The first being the fact that white students do not receive scholarships because they white. There are no “whites only” scholarships that non-white students cannot apply for at Gustavus. However, there does exist a scholarship known as the Paul Rucker scholarship. This scholarship is only for students of diverse backgrounds and/or of minority status. I cannot apply for this scholarship. How am I privileged as a white student? How is Gustavus making me privileged by awarding non-white scholarships and me nothing? How am I as a white student privileged in this? Not to mention I come from an average middle class family so I do not have hordes of money flowing in for college.

Further, the article said that the majority of white students do not want to meet and befriend those who are different from us. Furthermore, I cannot count how many people of diverse backgrounds I have met in my two years here at Gustavus who I am thankful for meeting. To say that the majority of white students do not want to be “cross culturally competent” is unfair.

Ms. Clarke’s letter ended with, “Why must I continually prove myself equal.” My answer is you do not have to. I, personally, see people, not their race. In my opinion, the majority of students see past race and agree that is does not matter what you look like, we are in fact all equal. How is this racism?

Matt Lindholm ’10

MCT Campus

Solution to be printed next week

ENTERTAINMENT

KING GUSTAV’S SUPER QUIZ
Subject: Motion Pictures

Freshman Level (score 1 point per question)
1. Which Saturday Night Live veteran both wrote and appeared in 2004’s cult classic Mean Girls?
2. The creators of V for Vendetta, Andy and Larry Wachowski, found fame in the 1990’s with what science fiction classic?
Graduate Level (score 2 points per question)
3. In which movie do the creators of South Park parody Rent with a show tune that proclaims that “Everyone has AIDS”?
4. What office does Christopher Walken’s character, William Cleary, hold in Wedding Crashers?
Ph. D. Level (score 3 points per question)
5. Diablo Cody, the Minnesota native who wrote 2007’s Juno, held what occupation before becoming published?
6. What is the name of the 1982 Oscar-winning Best Picture film that Richard Attenborough, Dr. John Hammond in the Jurassic Park series, directed?

Scoring: 12 to 10 points — King Gustav would be proud; 9 to 6 points — good student, but not worthy of a crown; 5 to 3 points — study harder; 2 to 1 point — go back to high school; 0 points — can you read?

ANSWERS:

King Gustav’s Super Quiz
Subject: Motion Pictures

Solution to be printed next week

ENTERTAINMENT

KING GUSTAV’S SUPER QUIZ
Subject: Motion Pictures

Freshman Level (score 1 point per question)
1. Which Saturday Night Live veteran both wrote and appeared in 2004’s cult classic Mean Girls?
2. The creators of V for Vendetta, Andy and Larry Wachowski, found fame in the 1990’s with what science fiction classic?

Graduate Level (score 2 points per question)
3. In which movie do the creators of South Park parody Rent with a show tune that proclaims that “Everyone has AIDS”?
4. What office does Christopher Walken’s character, William Cleary, hold in Wedding Crashers?

Ph. D. Level (score 3 points per question)
5. Diablo Cody, the Minnesota native who wrote 2007’s Juno, held what occupation before becoming published?
6. What is the name of the 1982 Oscar-winning Best Picture film that Richard Attenborough, Dr. John Hammond in the Jurassic Park series, directed?

Scoring: 12 to 10 points — King Gustav would be proud; 9 to 6 points — good student, but not worthy of a crown; 5 to 3 points — study harder; 2 to 1 point — go back to high school; 0 points — can you read?

ANSWERS: